capSpire Acquires FinTark, Expanding European Practice

Acquisition advances capSpire's position in the commodity and energy markets technology consulting space

TULSA, OK (August 25, 2026) – capSpire, a global technology consulting firm servicing the energy, commodities, and capital markets sectors, has acquired FinTark, a specialist commodity trading and risk management (CTRM) consultancy, with deep expertise across European energy and global metals markets. The move strengthens capSpire's ability to help clients worldwide select, implement, optimize, and support their CTRM technology.

Headquartered in London, FinTark delivers global commodity and energy advisory and technology services to investment banks, utilities, and commodity-intensive corporates.

This is capSpire's second acquisition this year, following Lucido in May 2026. Since receiving a growth investment from Falfurrias Management Partners in July 2024, the firm has grown headcount by more than 30%, from 300 to around 400 consultants across 20 countries. FinTark also represents capSpire's most significant investment in its European business to date, adding meaningfully to the firm's consultant base, client roster, and delivery presence across the region.

With FinTark's clients joining the firm, capSpire has become one of a small number of consultancies with expertise spanning both commodities and capital markets. FinTark's metals trading technology expertise also complements capSpire's established strength in energy and agricultural commodities.

"We're delighted to welcome the FinTark team to capSpire. It's a strong strategic and cultural fit. Their approach to CTRM delivery closely matches how we work with our own clients, and their strong experience in DACH and Eastern European energy markets, as well as financial trading, adds real depth to what we offer," said Duncan James, CEO of capSpire. "It also significantly expands our team of metals trading CTRM specialists. We look forward to having them on board."

"capSpire shares our commitment to technical rigor and long-term client relationships, and we're pleased to be joining a team that values those things as much as we do," added Premvir Jain, CEO of FinTark. "This is a natural next step for FinTark, one that broadens our reach and our service offering while continuing to deliver the standard of work our clients expect."

Clients of both firms will benefit from broader CTRM expertise and the reach of a consultancy that continues to invest deliberately in the markets and capabilities its clients need most. With its European presence now substantially expanded, capSpire's next phase of growth is already underway.

Keystone Law served as legal advisor to FinTark, and McGuireWoods served as legal advisor to capSpire.
